CUSTOMER FIELD NOTES / OCTOBER 2026

Susie Harper

A billing issue has become a trust issue

Customer: Susie Harper
Email: susie.harper@northstar.example
Company: Northstar Health
Calls: 2

In their words

> “I have called twice about the billing credit and it is still not fixed. I am frustrated and may cancel.”

Recent context

The October 12 call returned to the same billing credit discussed earlier. Susie said she still has not received a clear resolution.

Signal to review

Repeated contact, frustration, and direct cancellation language appear together.

Suggested follow-up

Assign one owner today, confirm the credit amount, and send Susie a dated resolution update.

This fictional example summarizes written notes. It is not a prediction or a substitute for reviewing the full customer history.

CUSTOMER FIELD NOTES / OCTOBER 2026

Marcus Chen

A promised workflow is holding up launch

Customer: Marcus Chen
Email: marcus.chen@brightpath.example
Company: BrightPath Learning
Calls: 1

> “We expected this before launch. We are looking at other options if the timeline keeps moving.”

What this may mean

In an October 15 planning conversation, Marcus connected a missing workflow to a delayed customer program.

Signal to review

A missed expectation is affecting a visible business milestone.

Suggested follow-up

Share a realistic delivery date and agree on a temporary workaround with Marcus.

This fictional example summarizes written notes. It is not a prediction or a substitute for reviewing the full customer history.

Alicia Brooks

Reliability questions are returning

Customer: Alicia Brooks
Email: alicia.brooks@fieldstone.example
Company: Fieldstone Group
Calls: 2

Recent conversation

Alicia described another service interruption and asked for a direct explanation of the reliability plan.

> “We had another outage this week. I need a clear update on what is changing.”

Signal to review

Repeated incidents can wear down confidence even without a cancellation threat.

Suggested follow-up

Send an incident summary and schedule a short reliability check-in this week.

This fictional example summarizes written notes. It is not a prediction or a substitute for reviewing the full customer history.

CUSTOMER FIELD NOTES / OCTOBER 2026

Dev Patel

Onboarding is progressing

Customer: Dev Patel
Email: dev.patel@pine.example
Company: Pine & Co.
Calls: 1

In their words

> “The first training session was helpful. One setup issue remains, but the team is happy with the support.”

Recent context

Dev followed up on October 16 to ask for a walkthrough of the reporting page.

Signal to review

The notes are mostly positive and describe a specific training need.

Suggested follow-up

Offer the reporting walkthrough and check that the setup issue is closed.

This fictional example summarizes written notes. It is not a prediction or a substitute for reviewing the full customer history.

Naomi Rivera

Recent feedback is consistently positive

Customer: Naomi Rivera
Email: naomi.rivera@atlas.example
Company: Atlas Fabrication
Calls: 0

> “Great experience this month. The new workflow is working well and the team is happy.”

What this may mean

Naomi also thanked the team for quick support and said they love the reporting tools.

Signal to review

Positive feedback appears across more than one recent interaction.

Suggested follow-up

Keep the normal success cadence and share the feedback with the support team.

This fictional example summarizes written notes. It is not a prediction or a substitute for reviewing the full customer history.

Owen Walker

A small issue was resolved quickly

Customer: Owen Walker
Email: owen.walker@evergreen.example
Company: Evergreen Studio
Calls: 1

Recent conversation

Owen reported a minor access issue during an October 14 support call. The issue was resolved quickly.

> “Helpful support, thank you.”

Signal to review

No clear frustration or cancellation language appears in this note.

Suggested follow-up

Continue the regular relationship plan.

This fictional example summarizes written notes. It is not a prediction or a substitute for reviewing the full customer history.